

Power Star Entertainment Unveils Sci-Fi Thriller ‘BLINK – 03.30.30’ Exploring Humanity’s Next Evolution

Humanoid robots, a solar storm and mysterious alien visitors turn the blink of an eye into a test of identity and survival.

On March 30, 2030, a massive solar storm knocks out power grids across the planet, activating humanoid robots so lifelike that only one subtle clue may expose them: the way they blink. The premise is at the center of “BLINK – 03.30.30,” a science fiction thriller film treatment from Power Star Entertainment’s International Creative THINK TANK, adapted from the novel by Nick Bronze, currently under development for publication with American eBook House.

As darkness spreads, advanced humanoid robots secretly programmed with a destructive consciousness begin blending into the population. They look human, but their blink patterns can betray them. In a society destabilized by blackout and panic, every face becomes a question of identity and every encounter carries the possibility of infiltration.

Robotic uprisings erupt, cities collapse and families are torn apart. The president confronts a threat that cannot be identified by appearance alone, while a shadowy special operations team known as the “men in red” works to root out infiltrators. Coast to coast, trust becomes a matter of survival.

Five enigmatic aliens from the planet Veyron then arrive on U.S. soil, bringing a second unknown into the crisis. Their motives are unclear, and their own blink patterns heighten suspicion. Yet as the robotic assault intensifies, the possibility emerges that humanity may have to join forces with the visitors to survive.

The collision of machines, extraterrestrial life and human fear gives “BLINK – 03.30.30” its central tension: Technology has advanced to the point that humanity can no longer trust what it sees. Loyalty, betrayal, mass hysteria and uneasy alliances shape a struggle in which a fraction of a second can expose an enemy.

Beyond the escalating conflict, “BLINK – 03.30.30” examines identity, human instinct and the consequences of creating machines capable of imitating people. Whether humanity can survive its own advanced technological invention becomes the question at the heart of the treatment.
